Some people have it and may never know it as they are affected by any sorts of symptoms. It can remain silent until there is severe damage to your liver. What Are the Symptoms of Hepatitis C? If you were to have symptoms of hepatitis C, what would they look like? Acute hepatitis C is the phase when you are first exposed to the disease. If you have symptoms at all, here are some to look out for, as listed by the Mayo Clinic. These include bruising easily, fatigue, bleeding easily, itchy skin, jaundice or yellowing of the skin, dark-colored urine, confusion and swelling in your legs. Symptoms usually show up between two and 12 weeks after being exposed to the virus and last two weeks to three months, according to the Mayo Clinic. Who Is at Risk to Get Hepatitis C? Hepatitis C is a virus transmitted through the blood from one person to another. Here are some situations that put you at an increased risk of getting the disease as cited by the Mayo Clinic. These include if you have HIV, inject or inhale drugs, are a health care worker who may be exposed to contaminated blood, have been in prison, received a tattoo or piercing from a questionable environment or were born to a woman with hepatitis C. Also, those born between the years of 1945 and 1965 have cause for concern as they are five times more likely to be infected with hepatitis C than people born outside of this time frame. Hepatitis C Treatment Hepatitis C is the leading cause of liver cancer and liver transplants, according to WebMD. It is curable. However, there is no easy fix that works for each person. There are different strands of hepatitis C and, thus, no one pill can treat them all. You and your doctor will have to work together to figure out which antiviral medications are going to work in your particular situation. Most medications can remove all traces of the virus in your blood in about 12 weeks. Preventing Hepatitis C The best and easiest way to prevent getting hepatitis C is to ensure you are making good decisions. Practice safe sex — use a condom. If you use illicit drugs, which you should seek treatment for a litany of reasons, never share needles with other users. Make sure to check the hygienic conditions of a place before you decide to get piercings or a tattoo. Complications From Hepatitis C Hepatitis C can lead to liver cancer. It can also cause cirrhosis of the liver, which creates mass scarring and makes it difficult for the liver to work as it should. This can then lead to complete liver failure and the need for a transplant to stay alive. Also known as C-suite executives, the "C" stands for "Chief," and they're the most powerful people in an organization. There are no rules determining what an executive may be called. If you own your own business, you can call yourself whatever you like, from Chief Executive Officer to Chief Sales Ninja. Ten common C-level titles include: CEO: Chief executive officer CFO: Chief financial officer COO: Chief operating officer CIO: Chief information officer CDO: Chief data officer CMO: Chief marketing officer CTO Chief technology officer CAO: Chief analytics officer CHRO: Chief human resources officer CSO: Chief sustainability officer In most businesses, the CEO title is usually the most common, followed by the CFO. Other C-level positions depend not just on the size of the company but also its requirements. An online marketing company, for instance, may have a greater need for a CDO than a CHRO, whereas a staffing agency may have more need for a CHRO than a CDO. In a typical business rank structure, the CEO is above the other C-level executives and reports to the board of directors. The CFO, CIO and other C-level executives report to the CEO. However, businesses can all have their own structure. In some cases, for example, the CFO may be of equal rank to the CEO, reporting directly to the board. Company presidents may report to the CEO or to the board. All other employees are usually below the C-level executive in charge of their departments. Marketing managers would report to the CMO in the marketing department rank tree, while the HR manager would report to the CHRO in the HR department rank tree. Traits to look for in a CEO include: intelligence awareness good judgment confidence charisma authenticity empathy While a CEO doesn't necessarily need a specific degree or background to excel at his job, this isn't true for a Chief Financial Officer. In most cases, a CFO should have an advanced degree in finance, accounting or an MBA. A CFO is usually responsible for controllership, which includes reporting accurate financial information about the company to shareholders, creditors and other stakeholders. A CFO is also usually the treasurer, responsible for determining risk, liquidity and for balancing debt with equity and internal financing. Traits to look for in a good CFO include computer skills in financial or accounting software, excellent communication skills and an understanding of risk. A CFO should have a firm understanding of finance laws and regulations, as well as the latest financial trends and developments. He should know how to create financial statements, budgets and other business documents, as well as know how to assess those written by others. A Chief Operating Officer is the person in charge of a company's daily operations. While the CEO is responsible for the overall company vision, the COO is the one who puts together the action plan to make it work. He's responsible for making the big decisions that will make an organization run efficiently while reducing costs and increasing profits. In large companies, the COO usually manages several different divisions within the organization, which can include supply chain management, sales, marketing and accounting. Traits to look for in an effective COO include a strong, practical business sense. They should usually have a degree in business or one that specifically relates to the company's operations like software development or engineering. Someone with a successful background in management that includes strategic planning, implementation and the ability to produce measurable results may also make a great COO. A Chief Information Officer is in charge of a company's information technology (IT) systems and its related services. Up until a decade or so ago, the CIO would have been mainly responsible for procuring new technologies to help a company thrive in the new century. This would have included the purchase of new computers, servers and software and, in many cases, building a company's entire IT infrastructure from the ground up. This was why, at some companies, the CIO was known as the Chief Innovation Officer. Times have changed, however, and today the CIO is more responsible for maintaining and updating systems that are already in place. In smaller organizations or those that are just starting out, the CIO may be responsible for procuring new systems. However, 80 percent of a typical CIO's budget is likely to be dedicated to maintenance rather than innovation. In a 2016 survey by International Data Corporation, only a quarter of CIO's identified their roles as being innovative. Nevertheless, advancements in technology continue to move forward, and a CIO must stay abreast of those changes. Traits to look for in a CIO include a thorough knowledge of current technologies and the ability to keep up-to-date on new trends and changes. A CIO should also be a good leader and an excellent educator, able to explain new procedures and protocols to the company's employees. For many companies, constant innovation is part of the corporate culture, and it's often the CIO's responsibility to instill that culture on others. A Chief Digital Officer is a relatively new C-suite position. As the title suggests, the CDO can be in charge of anything digital, including data, software and a company's internet presence. Approximately 20 percent of the largest 2,500 public companies in the world have a CDO. While a CDO may be in charge of all information technologies in a company, in other companies there's a clear distinction between the role of a CIO and a CDO. In these companies, the CIO would be in charge of internal technology, including the maintenance of the computer network and its servers, while the CDO would be in charge of client-centered technology like development software to be sold or developing a new online sales platform, including its marketing. Innovation and technological savvy are the main traits to look for in a good CDO. A degree in computer science or a related field is often a requirement.
